to sleep, down where the bending willows weep. I know a farm I'd like to buy; it's where I lived when three feet high. It's where my father used to strive to keep the family alive. Twas there, in bygone, golden days. I hoed the beans and husked the maize, and dreamed of triumphs I'd achieve. when I that dreary farm could leave. To dwell in cities was my aim, to cut a swath and conquer fame, and that old sandy, rocky farm for me was quite devoid of charm. The dreams I dreamed have all come true. I've done the things I meant to do, but I am old and worn and tired, and for a long time I've desired, above all other things, to go back to the scenes I used to know." Thousands of old men talk that way; when they are bent by the years, and gray, feeble of step and weak of arm, they turn their eyes to the old home farm.

Tells Brig. Gen. Harvey He Will Address Guardsmen or Will Write Them a Letter.

Brig. Gen. W. E. Harvey, commanding the National Guard of the District of Columbia, today urged President Wilson to make a speech before the local citizen soldiers that will serve as a word of encouragement to national guardsmen everywhere and aid in the increase in membership in this coming branch of the national defense. Gen. Harvey explained to the President that the National Guard generally labors under disadvantages and criticism and that it would be decidedly helpful if he should express himself fully on the subject. The President thanked Gen. Harvey for the suggestion and said that later on he will endeavor to comply with the suggestion, either by a speech or letter.

Gen. Harvey said, on leaving the White House, that he thinks the nation should wake up to the fact that the National Guard is hereafter to be a real part of the military establishment of the nation, and accord to the men in the guard all the help possible to give. ne help possible to give. Although Congress has passed the bill for enlarging the army and National Guard no provision has been made for enlargement of the District guard except in largement of the District guard except in so far as the general appropriation applies to the local organization. Gen. Harvey said today that he is preparing supplemental estimates to the District appropriation bill, which has passed the House, to submit to the Senate, and hopes the Senate will treat the District guard liberally. Above all the District guard needs an armory, he said, but it also needs many other things.

"There are several good organizations

The committee representing the Brookland Rose Society and the four citizens' associations co-operating in this great floral festival made a visit of inspection to all of the rose gardens cultivated by those who have reserved exhibition places at the show. It was found that while all of the bushes and trees are heavy with buds, there are very few that will be in bloom this week. This inspection convinced the committee that with a few warm days there will be more than 10,000 blooms on exhibition next week.
